

Economic Worries Down among Affluent

Published: June 8 2009

Affluent Americans remain concerned about the economy, health care, and unemployment and jobs – in that order, but the number of households reporting each of these issues as a concern has declined since last winter, according to the Spring '09 Barometer survey from Ipsos Mendelsohn.

As Affluent Americans remain concerned about the economy, health care, and unemployment and jobs – in that order, but the number of households reporting each of these issues as a concern has declined since last winter, according to the Spring '09 Barometer survey from Ipsos Mendelsohn.